M. COULAUD

PARIS

EVENING AT THE FARM

A pupil of Charles Jacques, this painter has had a distinguished career in France, though he is little known as yet in the United States. Forms of animals and men are well defined in the gathering darkness after sundown.

DAVID TURNER

ENGLISH SCHOOL

About 1800

David Turner devoted himself to landscape and architectural paintings and engravings. He exhibited at the Academy in the years immediately before and after 1800, the subject of his paintings being mostly taken from London and from the river Thames. His work has lately begun to be more adequately appreciated.

OLD LONDON BRIDGE

The banks of the Thames have attracted painters long before Whistler. Among those who found subjects in the heart of London was the engraver and painter, David Turner. In this view of London Bridge, the old Custom House appears on the right. The figures on the quay and all the details are excellent, but the great beauty of this picture lies in the sky, which is worthy of the later and more famous Turner.

On canvas, height, 19 $\frac{1}{4}$  inches; width, 26 $\frac{1}{4}$  inches.

MAX GAISSER

MUNICH

CAVALIER TRYING A NEW SONG

A gentleman of the seventeenth century in a white satin body coat, big white ruff, and pale gray felt hat examines a piece of music and holds a mandolin in his hand. Solid intelligent brushwork, excellent textures and still life.

No. 4

JAMES INSKIPP

ENGLISH SCHOOL

1790-1868

Inskipp was a man of parts and intellectual attainments who exhibited at the Royal Academy from 1820 to 1845 and at the Society of British Artists from 1825 to 1835. In 1838 he published "Studies of Heads from Nature."

PORTRAIT OF A LADY

Bust of young woman in low-necked scarlet corsage with a tea rose at her breast. She wears a broad brown beaver hat with old-rose ribbons. The hat shades the downcast eyes. Sumptuous soft brushwork full of color and rich quality.

On canvas, height, 24 inches; width, 20 inches.

JUNE IN THE ADIRONDACKS

Interior of forest with sunlight filtering through the glade in the background. A doe feeds in the shady foreground. Effect of the intense stillness of the American forest.

No. 6

JUAN CARREÑO DE MIRANDA

SPANISH SCHOOL

1614-1685

Carreño soon won recognition by his talents, and was specially patronized by Philip IV, who employed him in several important fresco works, and nominated him as his court painter. "His coloring was, in tenderness and suavity, perhaps superior to that of any painter of his country except Murillo."

PORTRAIT OF A SPANISH BOY

A youth painted with a devout expression of indifference to worldly things is shown with hands brought together in prayer, a face very pale and long black tresses falling over his black and loosely fitting jacket. A severe white linen collar relieves the darkness of the costume; it seems to be the golillo collar introduced by King Philip.

On canvas; height, 23 inches; width, 18 inches.

GUSTAVE BOURGAIN

PARIS

HERCULES AND OMPHALE

On the balcony-loggia of a house sits a young officer in the dress of Napoleon's dragoons before a spinning wheel. His brass helmet with horsehair plume rests on the balustrade. To one side stands a blooming maiden laughing at the young man's awkwardness. A jovial and well-painted genre picture representing a modern Hercules disarmed and enslaved by his love and beguiled into woman's work by his enslaver.

No. 8

G. B. WILLCOCK

ENGLISH SCHOOL

1820-1852

Of this painter, an example of whose work the National Gallery of London has lately bought, little is known. He exhibited twelve paintings in the Royal Academy between 1840 and 1851. His death was caused by a cold, caught while painting on Hampstead Heath. A writer has said of him: "His work is so like that of Constable that it is very possible that unscrupulous persons have often removed his signature and sold his pictures as those of the greater master."

MILL ON THE TEIGN, DEVONSHIRE

Landscape with watermill to the left, a sloping hill to the right, and a stream rippling over rocks in the centre. To the right on higher ground a group of fishermen. In the distance a bridge and cabins. There is an atmosphere about this picture which is personal and attractive. Fine tonal quality suggesting Constable.

F. H. KAEMMERER

PARIS

STUDENTS OF MUSIC

In the garden of the Luxembourg Palace, Paris, a young girl and her chaperon are walking from their music lessons, carrying their instruments and talking to one another. They pretend not to see a youth who follows them. The dress is that of about 1830. Landscape and figures in gay, light tones.

LUIS DE MORALES

SPANISH SCHOOL

1509-1586

Morales was called "El Divino" because he confined his talents to paintings of Christ and the Virgin, and also because of his fine execution. His larger works are principally in the churches, and even his smaller paintings are rarely seen out of Spain. "In his second period we find brilliancy of colour, but with an over-delicacy of feature, and melancholy grace."

MADONNA AND SLEEPING CHRIST-CHILD

The slightly inclined head of the Madonna and the type of her face show the influence of Raphael. Original is the sleeping face of the holy child, His small head, delicate limbs, and rosy knees. A peculiar Spanish crispness of handiwork which gives an original touch to the well-worn theme.

On canvas; height, 24 $\frac{3}{4}$  inches; width, 18 $\frac{1}{2}$  inches.

Purchased in Madrid, Spain.

SIR PETER LELY

ENGLISH SCHOOL

1617-1680

Lely was born in Germany, studied in Holland, and came to England at the age of twenty-four—one year after the death of Van Dyck, whose style he followed. He painted the portrait of Charles I and of Cromwell as well. Charles II appointed him his court painter and conferred on him the honor of knighthood. "He gained great reputation and encouragement, and for many years was the most eminent painter in England. His works are characterized by a beautiful and permanent coloring, and by the graceful attitudes of his subjects."

LADY IN GRAY SATIN GOWN

One of the fair ladies of the Court of Charles I clad in the sober yet rich gown the fashion for which was introduced by Queen Henrietta Maria. Like Van Dyck whose place he took, Sir Peter was very happy in giving the shimmer of silk and satin. Sam. Pepys has recorded the pomp, circumstance and great popularity of this Westphalian, who was a favorite under two English kings and the Protector Cromwell also.

On canvas; height, 40 $\frac{3}{4}$  inches; width, 34 $\frac{3}{8}$  inches.

HENRI HARPIGNIES

PARIS

THE SENTINEL TREES

Quiet landscape and sky viewed between the trunks and through the branches of old chestnut trees. The month is July, and the sun throws short shadows from a high position on the left. Leaves are finely indicated against a quiet even-toned sky. Beyond is a thoroughly cultivated land with rolling hills, very characteristic of northern and central France.

HYACINTHE RIGAUD

FRENCH SCHOOL

1659-1743

Born of a family of artists, Rigaud pursued his studies under local artists, first at Montpellier and then in the Academy in Paris, where he gained a prize the second year, attracting the attention of Le Brun, who advised him to devote his talents to portraiture. By years of application he became a recognized artist, was favored by the Court, ennobled in 1709, and afterwards pensioned by the king. His paintings may be found in all the principal galleries of Europe, and in many of the provincial galleries and private collections.

PORTRAIT OF THE PAINTER VAN LOO

The court painter, Jean Baptiste van Loo, a handsome man in a big wig, brown coat, soft lace cuffs and shirt bosom, and red velvet cloak, sits sidewise on a table and holds a big volume half opened with both hands. His feet are on the chair by the table, but are concealed by the cloak. Splendid drawing in book, draperies, and face; rich coloring, vivacious alert expression. Rigaud put his full power into this likeness of his fellow artist and in it produced one of the masterpieces of French art of the day.

Purchased from nobleman's collection in Marseilles, France.

On canvas; height, 55½ inches; width, 42½ inches.

Name on one of the volumes: "JEAN VAN LOO."

THÜRE VON CEDERSTRÖM

MUNICH

THE LITERARY PRELATE

The Swedish painter trained at Munich has pursued the line of genre in which Vibert was most successful, but has avoided the biting satire which Vibert sometimes showed. The Cardinal he paints here is surely a member of the Accademia which has existed for literary purposes during many centuries in Rome. He is a writer as well as reader.

No. 18

WILLIAM DOBSON

ENGLISH SCHOOL

1610-1646

Dobson, called "the English Van Dyck," appeared to have approached nearest to the excellence of the great Flemish master. Van Dyck was his friend; and after the former's death, Dobson was appointed painter to Charles I, whose portrait he painted. He painted a number of the nobility. Several of his portraits are in the National Gallery.

PORTRAIT OF MILTON IN HIS YOUTH

The fair-haired youth here portrayed has been identified as John Milton, the poet, who was only two years older than Dobson. His appearance in this picture coincides with the story that, when at Cambridge, his delicate features and fastidious manners won him the nickname of the "Lady of Christ's College." Portraits of Milton in his old age exist, but this one of the period when he wrote "Lycidas" is unique. Its quality shows how great a painter was lost when Dobson died at thirty-six.

THE LONGSHORE FISHERMAN

A lively expanse of strand and white-capped sea with rolling, racing clouds above. Down the beach are figures. Near the foreground is a cart with old white horse, and wading in the shallow rippling water is a Schell-Fischer, or gatherer of cockles, using a rake to secure his harvest. Easy brilliant effects of light under pale gray skies.

ADRIAEN HANNEMAN

DUTCH SCHOOL

1611-1680

Hanneman was a distinguished portrait painter at The Hague who was induced to visit England by reason of the encouragement given to the arts by Charles I. He was a pupil of Ravesteyn and a follower of Van Dyck. During the sixteen years he worked in England he painted portraits of the nobility; and his portrait of Charles II was engraved by Danckerts. His portraits are found at Hampton Court and in the Vienna, Rotterdam and Frankfort galleries.

PORTRAIT OF LADY ERLE

A small standing figure of a fair lady in gray satin with gown cut low in the neck and long reddish curls. Her brow is hung with a range of small curls, and long curls fall quite to her shoulders which are entirely bare. Her only ornaments are a bracelet of pearls and a few single pearls that catch at the sleeves. Remarkable rendering of tissues. A background of column, rock, and torrent in the Van Dyck manner.

From the executors of George Allen, Marnhull, Dorsetshire, England.

SIR GODFREY KNELLER

DUTCH SCHOOL

1646-1723

Kneller, although born in Germany, is classed in the Dutch School, as he received his art education in the school of Rembrandt, and afterwards studied under Ferdinand Bol. After visiting Italy, he spent some time in Hamburg; but at the age of twenty-eight he went to England, where at the courts of Charles II, James II, and William and Mary, he won laurels and fortune. He was knighted in 1692, and created a baronet in 1715. "There was hardly a person of note in his day whom he did not paint."

RIGHT HONORABLE COUNTESS OF CLARENDON

SALVATOR ROSA

ITALIAN SCHOOL

1615-1673

Rosa was born in Italy, and spent his life largely in Naples, Rome, and Florence. After great struggles with poverty and neglect, he finally achieved the very highest distinction. "The brightest era of landscape painting is said to have been in the time of Pope Urban VIII, when flourished Claude Lorraine, Gaspard Poussin, and Salvator Rosa. Of these Salvator was the most distinguished." Sir Joshua Reynolds said: "What is most to be admired in the works of Salvator Rosa is the perfect correspondence which he observed between the subjects which he chose and his manner of treating them."

IN THE MOUNTAINS

A rugged mountain scene. Probably one of the haunts in which Salvator Rosa passed much of his life. A rapid stream flows at the foot of the mountains and breaks in a succession of cascades. Several groups of individuals. The party in the foreground seemingly on a picnic excursion; one of them is evidently endeavoring to catch fish for the approaching meal. Strong painting of trees in Salvator's manner. Great masses of color, well-lit sky. A fine example of this great early landscapist.

GEORGE MORLAND

ENGLISH SCHOOL

1763-1804

George Morland, the pupil of his father, the hard worker and hard drinker, is more and more winning the favor of discriminating collectors. His simple pictures, depicting rural scenes and personages, have a charm of their own, and an individuality which distinguishes them from all other works. With exception of a brief visit to France, his whole life was spent in England.

GIPSY CAMP

A family of gipsies have pitched a small shelter tent near some magnificent oaks and kindled a fire, near which stands an old woman. By her side sits a younger woman with two children. In the middle distance a man approaches with fagots. To the left is a donkey lying down. Rich color effects to which woodland and figures contribute their share.

The speedy success of Lawrence after his arrival in London and his early and constant patronage by the kings and the aristocracy of Europe evidence the appreciation which marked his career. PORTRAIT OF A YOUNG MAN

Russell received his first art education from Francis Cotes. After a number of years of difficulty and despondency, he began to win success, and in 1792 he was called "painter to the King and Prince of Wales, and also to the Duke of York." Subsequently he received commissions to execute the portrait of the Princess of Wales with the infant Princess Charlotte on her knees. His portraits of children are particularly admired. Most of his work was done in pastel, but occasionally he used the oil medium. Splendid examples of Russell's work are exhibited in the palace at Hampton Court.

OFF TO THE GARDEN

A sweet-faced girl is depicted by the popular British portrait painter in the act of running out into the garden for flowers. She carries a brown flat basket and seems to have stopped suddenly to gaze at some one with the frank direct stare of childhood. Her big brown eyes are inquiring but fearless. Delightful tones in curly locks and the dull pink sash.

He painted history and portraits and his works were much admired by the connoisseurs of the court. The galleries of the Berlin Schloss and those of Sans-souci in Potsdam contain many of his works.

Portrait by a Frenchman who became court painter to Frederick the Great, and died in Prussia, a Director of the Academy. Straight-forward style, delicate modeling and sweet light tones, like those so much admired in Fragonard and Greuze. Lawrence began drawing portraits in his earliest youth. At the age of eighteen he first went to London, when Sir Joshua Reynolds, then near the end of his career, gave him valuable advice. At the age of twenty-one the King, who had already patronized him, insisted upon his being made an extra associate of the Royal Academy, and the following year on the death of Reynolds he was appointed painter-in-ordinary to his Majesty. Lawrence painted nearly all the crowned heads of Europe and all the celebrities of his time.

Being a good linguist and an accomplished writer, he was in touch with the literary men of his time and painted their portraits with very considerable ability.

PORTRAIT OF LORD CHESTERFIELD

The Earl of Chesterfield was more of a statesman than an author, but during the intervals of his political career he "cultivated the Muses" in the somewhat condescending way of nobles in his time. In this portrait the Scottish painter Ramsay has depicted the famous ambassador to Holland and Lord Lieutenant of Ireland in his character as writer. It is an honestly painted, rather stately portrait, remarkable for the handsome way in which the cloak is managed, recalling the manner of Hogarth rather than Reynolds.

Rustic figures, rural scenes and simple life of the English home life were depicted by his prolific brush. Two of his paintings are shown in the National Gallery.

NICOLAAS MAES

DUTCH SCHOOL

Of the life of Maes, or Maas, very little is known. He first studied under Rembrandt in Amsterdam, and in his earlier pictures closely followed the style of his master. About 1665, leaving Rembrandt's studio, he removed to Antwerp, where he lived until 1678. Returning to Amsterdam, he remained there until his death. The strange variance in the style of Maes's earlier and later works has puzzled art critics. Maes must be counted among the great artists that Holland has produced.

PORTRAIT* OF A GENTLEMAN

This is a picture at which painters marvel. Not merely has the pupil of Rembrandt given the character of his sitter but he has finished the whole figure with a solid, exact and truthful brushwork only attained by the few. In fact, many of his examples approach so closely to the style and technique of Cuyp that even in great museums they are attributed to that master.

CATTLE BY THE RIVER

Scene of absolute rest and quiet in the morning hours on a Dutch canal or English tidal river. Van Strij lived long in England. # SIR HENRY RAEBURN

SCOTTISH SCHOOL

1756-1823

Excepting a two-year visit to Italy and a very rare sojourn in London, where he enjoyed the special friendship of Sir Joshua Reynolds, Raeburn, who has been called "the Scotch Reynolds," spent his life in Edinburgh. He was the favorite portrait painter of Scotland. "He made it his peculiar study to bring out the mind of his subjects. His penetration enabled him quickly to discover their favorite pursuits, and to engage them on topics of lively conversation; and while they spoke, he caught the features enlivened by the strongest expression of which they were susceptible. His portraits not only seem to live and breathe, but to think, looking as though they were about to speak on some favorite topic." The great genius of Raeburn has only lately been adequately appreciated, and it is safe to say that his works will constantly rise higher and higher in value.

PORTRAIT OF NEIL GOW, THE SCOTTISH FIDDLER

This likeness of a celebrated character is painted with the strong, firm manner to which the Scottish portrait painter Raeburn owes his fame. He is painted just as he was, without any accessories except his beloved violin over which he draws the bow with inclined head and dreamy eyes. Note the splendid feeling for form in the modeling of the musician's head and the richness of the coloring.

GEORGE MORLAND

The works of few artists of the Early English School are more rapidly rising in public appreciation than those of George Morland. He came from a family of artists, and showed his talent for drawing at the early age of seven. His youth was spent in the studio of his father, his leisure in reading, violin playing and country rambles. His life, wholly devoted to art, was passed almost entirely in London. His extravagant and wild living brought him to an early death at the age of forty-two, but his genius and deep sympathy with nature have given him an enviable place in English Art.

ENGLISH SCHOOL

Sir Peter Lely, whose real name was Pieter van der Faes, was born in Westphalia. After two years' study at Haarlem, he decided to visit England, where he arrived at the age of twenty-three. Imitating the style of Van Dyck, he soon sprang into favor, and at the marriage of William of Orange with the Princess Mary in 1643 he was presented to Charles I and received orders to paint his portrait and those of various members of his family. Although Lely remained in England during the Commonwealth, and even painted the portrait of Cromwell, Charles II none the less made him his principal painter and honored him with a baronetcy. His success in life was unbroken, and he died at the age of sixty-two, blessed with wealth and honors.

A portrait of Elizabeth, daughter of James I, married to Frederick V, Elector Palatine and King of Bohemia, driven from his throne by the Austrians. This sister of Charles I is shown standing. She wears the white satin gown which was in fashion at the time. At her ears hang enormous pear-shaped pearls. Through an opening in the rear a fleet of ships may indicate the assistance that James I attempted to afford his son-in-law and daughter in order to regain the lost electorate.

“OUR DAILY BREAD”

Charming domestic scene by one of the most successful of the younger painters of Holland who work in the vein of Israels, Neuhuys and Blommers. In a simple room before a rude table sits the mother with a loaf pressed against her bosom as she cuts a slice for the little girl who stands at her knee. The light falls through white curtains on this group and on the blond head of a small boy seated on a bench between table and window. Note the beautiful tones in wall hanging and green kerchief of the mother, also her pale lilac waist and apron-skirt of faded blue. A chapter from the humble homes of Brabant. Pieters is an Antwerp artist who has taken gold medals in Paris and Barcelona.

FRANCIS COTES

ENGLISH SCHOOL

1726-1770

A distinctly English portrait artist, much in vogue in London during his lifetime. He was one of the first members of the Royal Academy, and a member of the Incorporated Society of Artists. Portraits by him are found in many noble English families and public institutions.

LADY IN WHITE SILK

GEORGE HENRY HARLOW

ENGLISH SCHOOL

1787-1819

Harlow was a pupil of Sir Thomas Lawrence, "and it is allowed that he entered more largely into the peculiar style and character of that master's performances than any other of his pupils." His death at the early age of thirty-two prevented his attaining his highest development, although his good portraits are steadily rising in public estimation.

EQUESTRIAN PORTRAIT OF THE DUKE OF WELLINGTON

(AFTER LAWRENCE)

The duke is represented as a man of middle age on horseback, raising his chapeau as a salute to troops. He wears a long black cloak over his black uniform and sits his steed with much grace. This is in great contrast to the portraits of the Iron Duke made in his old age.

START OF THE PLEASANT TRIP, WALLACHIA

On a brilliant day in autumn a party of young people set out on a drive. The procession starts with two buxom Wallachian girls in a cart pulled by a lively horse. They are in great spirits, seeming to anticipate a jolly time. The Polish painter excelled in the drawing of horses.

ALESSANDRO VAROTARI (IL PADOVANINO)

ITALIAN SCHOOL

1590-1650

The nickname Padovanino, "little Paduan," which he received at Venice, came from his having been born in Padua. His father was a painter, and he was brought up under the best traditions of Venetian art. "His coloring is rich and full of Venetian splendor; there is a quality of opulence within his brush-work, and his flesh tints seem to recall something of the lost golden coloring of Titian." Examples of his work are found in the Academy at Venice, in the Louvre and the National Gallery.

MUSE OF MUSIC

JOHAN HENDRICK VAN MASTENBROEK

ROTTERDAM

WINTER MORNING AT THE LOCK

Mastenbroek is one of the younger painters of Holland, and makes Rotterdam serve as his place for subjects. He gives the feeling of damp cold in his atmosphere and invests a canal lock with a tragic intensity that surprises. This is an extraordinary picture in many ways. It recalls the magic brush of Jacob Maris, but it is entirely individual.

JACOPO PALMA (IL GIOVINE)

ITALIAN SCHOOL

1544-1628

Palma, after studying under his father Antonio, nephew of Palma Vecchio, was taken by the Duke of Urbino to Rome. While his best paintings are found in the Palace of the Doges, interesting examples of his work may be seen in the museums of Dresden, Munich, Florence, Vienna and Venice.

THE MADONNA AND CHILD WITH GLOBE

Lovely example of the charm in Venetian coloring. Palma Giovine kept some of the old conventions as to draperies and attributes. The Christ-child has one foot on a globe signifying the world and holds up two fingers in the traditional way. Both mother and child are looking down to the right as if St. John were there.

Exquisite tones of dull gold, of flesh color, and of old rose.

The artist of this painting, like all the work of Clouet, shows traces of Flemish origin. None the less they possess a French element which is observable in their elegance and their insight into the moral and physical character of the person represented.
